Harvest Update

September 2, 2015

ALFALFA

Growers are looking forward to the return of more stable weather as monsoon season in the Pacific Southwest is nearing its end.

New Mexico is still feeling the effects of monsoon season as growers dealt with intermittent storms last week. The 3rd cutting Alfalfa harvest is progressing slower than anticipated, however weather forecasts are improving and we are expecting clear skies by the middle of the week.

The weather in Utah has been mild allowing growers to make good progress on their 3rd cutting Alfalfa harvest. We are seeing improved quality as the weather begins to cooperate.

Oregon has also benefited from mild weather. Clear skies continued in Klamath Falls this past week enabling growers to make steady progress on 3rd cutting Alfalfa. Growers in the Christmas Valley region also began their 3rd cutting Alfalfa harvest this week.

Washington is still working on their 4th cutting harvest. Overall, growers bringing in the 4th cutting harvest are continuing to see good, green color.

TIMOTHY

Though light showers fell in a few areas over the past weekend, growers in the Columbia River Basin and Kittitas Valley were able to resume 2nd cutting Timothy harvest. Quality, for the most part, continues to hold.
